Late last year, Activision Blizzard said that a planned push toward more esports features in Call of Duty: Black Ops 4 had been put on hold. Now, though, the publisher has taken a major step toward making esports a core focus. On Wednesday, Activision Blizzard CEO Bobby Kotick revealed a partnership with the Esports Bar—an esports lounge in New York City. The room is said to be the "first dedicated esports bar," opening in the Fulton Street location of the chain on November 28. "The Esports Bar's mission is to bridge the gap between the eSports community and the rest of the world by creating a socially curated environment that promotes and brings together this global community," Kotick said in a statement. The new lounge will host weekly Call of Duty: Black Ops 4 games and other eSports games, as well as interviews with professional players. Along with the "innovative space" and games, the lounge will also feature "distinctive cocktails, 82157476af
