You get a CD that contains the installation program so you can install it on one PC over and over again. The CD is not a key generator to generate registration numbers for all different PCs. You need to buy a license key to generate registration keys for other PCs, or you can find a cracked version on the web. If you have problems downloading from the link, please contact me at and I will send it by email. You can install it on all the PC that belong to you, or that are in your possession, e.g. laptop, pc's in the house etc. You can not install it on any PC that are not in your possession, which means you can't install it on a friends computer or a clients computer etc.. However you can use the network license features to remotely administer several PCs from one PC. To install it locally on a PC, put the CD in the drive and follow the instructions. You don't need to enter a license key or anything, it will work until you remove it from your computer. If you want to install it on several computers, buy a license key. To use the network license features, install it on one PC, called installation host. Then from any other PC you can access this Host PC using the network license service and get a license to install AutoCAD on that other computer. There are several different versions of AutoCAD 2008 available:
